BONN - President Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria has abruptly postponed a scheduled visit to West Germany, a government spokesman said Sunday.

The move came five days after the East German leader, Erich Honecker, apparently succumbed to Soviet pressure and canceled a

One of the Soviet Union's most trustworthy allies, Mr. Zhivkov appeared to have followed Mr. Honecker's lead and put off his trip to underscore Moscow's anger at the Kohl government and to make the point that normal relations with Eastern Europe were not possible because of the purportedly changed strategic situation caused Keenly interested in forging closer economic ties with West Germany, Bulgaria has paid only lip service to a Soviet-led campaign that charges that "revanchist" forces are in charge in Bonn and aspire to change Europe's postwar frontiers. Poland and Czechoslovakia have been the shrillest Warsaw Pact participants in the campaign. On Saturday, speaking at a rally in Sofia to mark the 40th anniversary of the Communist takewer, Mr. Zhivkov accused the United States of preparing for war.

"Through rapidly accelerating the arms race, the imperialists and above all the U.S. imperialists, strive at achieving military, stratege and political superiority over the countries of real socialism and are preparing themselves for a third world war," Mr. Zhivkov said. The Bulgarian leader said that the Soviet Union would thwart such schemes, Mikhail S. Gorbachov, regarded by some as the sec-ond-ranking figure in the Kremlin hierarchy, attended the rally.

Earlier this month, Wolfgang Mischnick, the Bonn floor leader of the Free Democratic Party, visited Bulgaria and Romania and said that their leaders hoped that Mr. Honecker would make his visit to West Germany.

President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania is scheduled to visit Bonn on Oct. 15, and there has been no sign that he intends to call off his trip. Romania pursues an occasionally maverick foreign policy within the Warsaw Pact, and defied a Soviet boycott by sending athletes to the Los Angeles Olympic Games.

The Zhivkov postponement was another blow to an ambitious Eastern European policy that the Kohl government has been crafting. The policy included plans for a visit to Czechoslovakia by Chancellor (Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

Peres Faces Labor Revolt On Cabinet

TEL AVIV - Prime Ministerdesignate Shimon Peres faced a possible rebellion within his Labor dignment over a national unity government on Sunday, raising doubts that it would be set up as planned this week.

"Everything is more or less open," said Gad Yaacobi, a senior Labor legislator who helped negotiate the plan for a bipartisan cabinet with the Likud bloc of the caretaker prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir. The 1,200-member central committee of the Labor Party is scheduled to vote Monday on the unity accord. Israel Radio's political correspondent said doubts were mounting that the agreement would be approved. Speaking on the state-owned ra-dio, Mr. Yaacobi said there was dissatisfaction over Mr. Peres's decision to bow to Mr. Shamir's demand that key economic cabinet posts go to Likud ministers, including Ariel Sharon.

Mr. Sharon, forced to resign as defense chief last year after an investigation found him indirectly responsible for the massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees in Beirut in September 1982, has been selected for the trade and industry

Under the unity accord, Mr. Peres will serve as prime minister until 1986, when Mr. Shamir takes over. Labor will hold the defense portfolio for the duration of the government's 50-month term while Likud will name a finance minister.

The power-sharing agreement followed the inconclusive July 23 elections in which neither major party won enough seats for a par-

Mr. Yaacobi said "not a few" central committee members considered the accord "so problematic that it should not be ratified."

The Jerusalem Post reported that up to 35 percent of the group could vote against the agreement. It said members were incensed over the reinstatement of Mr. Sharon to a position of influence.

"Everyone knows we went to new elections in order to save the economy, to change direction," Mr. Yaacobi said. "And now we find ourselves in a situation in which the Labor Party will play a minor

Mr. Bani-Sadr moved out earlier this year from the house he shared with the Mujahedin leader, Mr. Rajavi, north of Paris after the two men fell out.

After refusing to discuss Mr. Mitterrand's visits to Morocco on the grounds that they were strictly private, French officials are now busily denying rumors that they foreshadow any change in France's traditionally even-handed ap-proach to its two former North African colonies.

Exit Poll' May Enter Pages of Webster's

Exit poll may be on its way into the dictionary, but yuppie and yumpie are unlikely candidates, according to the editors of the Merriam-Webster dictio-

Although political campaigns are a regular source of new words, the linguistic pickings have been slim since Watergate and smoking gun made the 1983 edition of "Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary."

"I can't think of any new words Ronald Reagan has contributed to the language," said James G. Lowe, a senior editor.

Frederick C. Mish, editor in chief of the dictionary, noted that "American politics has, from its earliest times, been a great contributor to the vocabulary of English," from the days of caucus, mugwimp and gerry-mander through suffragette, New Deal and whistle-stop and on down to dirty tricks, power broker and limousine liberal.

Despite some politicians' hopes to prohibit the interviewing of voters as they leave the polls, exit poll may have enough staying power to make it into the dictionary, Mr. Lowe said. (short for young urban professional or young urban preppie) and yumpie (young upwardly mobile professional).

Foreign Engineers Staying On in U.S.

President Reagan's announcement last month that he would nominate Nam Pyo Suh as assistant director for engineering at the National Science Foundation pointed up the increasingly important role that foreign-born engineers are playing in the United States.

Mr. Suh is a professor of mechanical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge. A native of Korea, he emigrated to the United States as a teenager in 1954, earned college and graduate degrees and became a citizen in 1963. He is one of thousands of foreign-born engi-neers and scientists who come to the United States to study and stay on to teach and work.

"One view fears that these foreign students are going to get the jobs that Americans should get," says Charles Falk of the science foundation. "The other says that it's all great — we are the training ground of the world, and it's very good diplo-macy to train people and ex-pose them to American culture."

The foundation says that for-eigners earn well over half of all U.S. graduate degrees in engineering. They also form a large share of graduate enrollments in other disciplines: 37 percent of the graduate students in mathematics and computer science courses in 1983, 31 percent in the physical sciences, 21 percent in the social sciences. 15 percent in the life sciences and 12 percent in environmental

> This latter idea is included in a new fire policy set forth in the Federal Register this summer and now moving through the regulatory process.

"The service has been following this Smokey Bear stuff for 40 years," said Danny Hart, district ranger at the Helena National Forest in Montana, which lost 28,000 acres last month. "But when you go out and fight every fire, you get a tremendous buildup of growth in the forest. Then when this fire came along, all that dense fuel was just waiting and away she went, way out of control."

E.M. Stiger, a Forest Service ecologist, agreed that "fire is a fundamental part of the forest ecosystem." But the consensus is that Smokey Bear's central fire prevention message is still valid. Piper ranks second to the Cessna Aircraft Co. as a U.S. maker of private planes. But it has lost $61 million in the past two years. In 1979, Piper sold 5,774 planes. Last year, sales nosedived to 771.

While being renovated, the building at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington has looked like the Beige House, the Gray House or the Stone House. Officials promise that by Inauguration Day, Jan. 20, it will again look like the White House. The original face of Virginia sandstone had been paint-ed so often that it had begun to reject additional coats, so it was decided to strip it down before repainting. The building had been covered by as many as 32 coats of white paint since 1801, plus some scorch marks dating to the burning of the White House by the British in the War firm in his beliefs that he does not worry like "other people worry."

She said, "I think it must be easier when you have a definite philosophy, rather than having to search around for one. He worries, but not in the sense that other people worry, you know. He's concerned — I guess maybe that's a better word. He's a born optimist. The glass is always half-full."

During the interview, Mrs. Reagan seemed more at ease than ever before in discussing criticism of herself and her husband.

She said she began to take herself and her critics less seriously on March 30, 1981, the day her husband was critically wounded by a would-be assassin outside a Washington hotel.

The interview came near the end of a two-day political swing through Oregon, Washington and Colorado, where she attended sev-

Teamwork in Jerusalem

The stalemate brought about by the inconclusive Israeli elections of July 23 has been broken, finally, by an agreement between the two major parties to share power in a so-called national unity government. A new government could be in place in a week. It sounds crazy that Labor and the outgoing Likud, so long at war, could agree to trade off the prime ministership (first Labor's Shimon Peres, then the Likud incumbent, Yitzhak Shamir) after two years, divide the ministries and otherwise suspend bloodletting. Lack of an acceptable alternative produced the bizarre structure with which Israelis will experiment now.

The rationale is hope that the new dispensation will allow the small parties, which demand exorbitant political payoffs for participating in a government with one or the other large party. to be trimmed to size. It may even permit electoral reform that reduces the weight of those small parties permanently.

Meanwhile, or so optimists suggest, Labor and Likud working together will be better able than either governing alone to impose the severe austerity that everyone agrees — in principle - is essential to tame the country's galloping economic crisis. In principle? The timid governments and ardent consumers familiar in Israel do not build confidence in its capacity to slay the monster of indexation, which currently protects most citizens' standard of living, or to shrink the subsidies that ensure the inefficiency of many enterprises.

ment may institutionalize bipartisanship - or inertia. During the campaign, some of the sharper edges were filed off the two parties' formal disagreements. There may be a working consensus now, for instance, to continue but to cut back on new West Bank settlements. On negotiations, Labor's and Likud's differing tendencies are rendered somewhat academic by King Hussein's hesitancy, the PLO's fragmentation and the West Bankers' confusion; currently there is no Arab negotiating partner. On Lebanon, continuing casualties long ago forged a common interest in ending the Israeli occupation as soon as some workable combination of Lebanese and United Nations forces can be put together on the ground.

In this American election season there is no impulse in the United States to disrupt relations with Israel. The Reagan administration has taken the occasion of the Arab-Israeli diplomatic lull to work up plans to help Israel put its economy on a steadier footing. This is worth doing if it involves more than pouring in extra subsidies, enabling Israel to avoid its own hard choices and adding an extra and unneeded level of concern to a U.S.-Israeli relationship that is difficult enough to manage as it is. Sooner or later, however, America is going to have to get back to the Israeli-Palestinian question, which is in partial eclipse at the moment but still alive and unresolved.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

Democracy Is Tolerance

President Reagan said at a prayer breakfast in Dallas last month: People who resist the imposition of prayer in public schools are "attacking religion" and frustrating the will

"of the great majority of Americans."

He told a B'nai B'rith convention in Washington last week: The Constitution "makes sure that every single American is free to choose and practice his or her religious beliefs or to choose no religion at all. Their rights shall not be questioned or violated by the state."

There is a contradiction here, evident to those who choose no religion at all, plus many Catholics, Jews, Protestants and others. What would Mr. Reagan advise them to do when their children are ridiculed for not participat-ing in "voluntary" school prayers? Does he, truly, think they are free to go out and resist such religious practice? Or does he think, as he said in Dallas, that if they do resist it is they who are guilty of intolerance?

Intolerance: That is the word that burns beneath all the smoke about religion and politics, a coupling that offends neither church nor state. There is plenty of religion in politics and ought to be. People in a democracy should act on their social values, whether derived from religious faith or secular sources. Churches have long preached the social gospel. They have been prominent in the civil rights movement, in the Vietnam resistance, in anti-nuclear campaigns, even in partisan cam-paigns like the Reverend Jesse Jackson's run for the Democratic presidential nomination. It is no offense to the Constitution that, in place of the social gospel, other churches now preach social Darwinism or inveigh on behalf of spending billions for new weapons and against spending any federal dollars for aborr comes from oh so sure they're right, who insist that they alone represent the one true political faith, who revile the other side as godless, intolerant obstructionists. President Reagan has come close to expressing just such certitude.

He did seem to moderate his views on Thursday before the B'nai B'rith, but just two days before, speaking to the American Legion, he was still dividing the world into children of light and children of darkness: "What some would do is to twist the concept of freedom of religion to mean 'freedom against religion.

Religionists have every right to lobby for causes, to run for office, to criticize with vehemence - but not to misrepresent their opponents or ridicule their motives. Indeed, these rights carry with them a responsibility to respect other views. In short, tolerance: the vital insulator of democracy, the cushion that soft-ens the sharp collisions between different views and faiths and enables all Americans to live together in reasonable harmony.

Mr. A may strongly support capital punishment yet feel passionately that abortion is murder. Mrs. B may disagree with equal passion on both counts and demand of Mr. A. "Death is death. Why can't you see the inconsistency in your positions?" There are times when devout practitioners of one creed, although completely sure they are right, con-front equally tenacious believers of the opposite. In this free society, the practical, not to mention moral, mechanism is tolerance.

Did it ever occur to the president that opponents of school prayer might have worthy motives and are not out to frustrate "the great majority"? Or that they might be right? And even if not, did it ever occur to him that their views deserve their president's respect? That would be tolerance. Or, as Learned Hand, the legendary jurist, said during the dark days of World War II: "The spirit of liber spirit that's not too sure it's right."

Other Opinion

Reagan on Nuclear Weapons

President Reagan's promise to try to "eliminate" nuclear weapons in a second term is not to be taken too seriously. There is little prospect of it happening. And, noble a sentiment as it sounds, it is not an entirely sensible objective. The temptation for either superpower to make a pre-emptive strike in some other technology - laser, chemical or biological weapons - would be increased, and the world might be a more rather than a less dangerous place. Nonetheless there is enormous scope for a cut in nuclear arsenals while retaining the balance of terror.

Helping Latin America Cope

Latin America is hanging on. Although there was a one-day general strike in Argentina on Sept. 3, and two days of disorder in Chile, there is still little sign of a much-feared general political explosion throughout Latin America. High unemployment and sharp cuts in real wages because of the region's foreign debt crisis continue. But the end is not nigh. Latin America's democracies are mostly improving their economic performance at great social and political cost and by squeezing their imports (although some countries are starting to increase their imports again). Argentina remains the chief exception to this improving trend. Talk of a debtors' cartel is receding. Bankers have been encouraged to think of multi-year rescheduling of debts from Mexico, Brazil and possibly Venezuela, Interest [is] being trim-med. The United States and Britain are holding back from multi-year rescheduling of government debts. Do not fellow democracies south of the Rio Grande deserve a better deal? - The Economist (London).

By Jan Tinbergen

THE HAGUE - An important element of today's international situation is the uncertainty that each superpower feels about the real policy aims of the other: Are they compatible with the slogans it uses to motivate its soldiers (patriotism or democracy), or does each side aim to propagate its social order? We may recall the historic role of patriotism: As long as it is defensive on both sides, no harm can be done, but this is not so when we claim that the best defense is attack.

Suppose we assumed that what was really at stake was the social order: One aim of the Soviet Union's international policy is to spread the com-munist order, and a U.S. policy aim is to maintain the capitalist order. But both formulations are inexact.

The Soviet order is not completely communist. Private enterprise is maintained in some sectors; farmers can expend part of their labor on private plots of land; some personal services can be supplied privately. In economic performance. Half a century ago few if any Western "experts" on Japan anticipated that develop-ment. This should be a moderating consideration when opinions on developing countries are formulated.

In several respects Japanese society shows socialist features. Income inequality is considerably less than in the United States; industrial democracy is more developed than in America or most of Europe.

One of the important contributions to the discussion on socialism was Karl Marx's preference for a scientific approach to the study of social development. But scientific thinking itself develops, shifting continually as a consequence of new facts and insights derived from scientific research. We should not stick to scientific knowledge as it was in 1850, but apply current thinking. Adhering to ideas of 1850 would not be scientific.

Two important facts that were unknown to Marx or Lenin are the production of nuclear energy and pollu-tion of the environment. Both are of primordial importance to our future. Nuclear war or large-scale pollution could mean an end to human life on Earth. Thus, a new priority has devel-oped as a precondition to changing the social order - that neither a nuclear war nor intensive pollution, such as acid rain or other intoxication of our environment, should interfere with socioeconomic policies. The prevention of these disasters sets some limits on what instruments of socioeconomic policy can be ap-plied. Expressed more positively, the prevention of these disasters requires the creation of institutions, as elements of our socioeconomic order, of a supranational character. The clearest modern example is the prevention of pollution. This can be organized only by an agency of su-pranational character deciding on the use or non-use of certain types of fuel and vested with the policing power needed to enforce such decisions. Most of the present forms of international cooperation - treaties between sovereign states - do not guarantee the execution of decisions.

Will the superpowers be able jointly to create such a supranational agency? Can the UN Security Council be so reorganized as to become a truly supranational agency — without veto power for each member, and with a world peace force?

In America Is Reagan By James Reston

The Issue

WASHINGTON — The longer this American election cam. pain goes on, the more apparent it is that Ronald Reagan is the main issue. The Republicans are counting on it to win in November. The Democrats are divided on the prodence of attacking the president personally, but Walter Mondale is gradually coming to the view that the president's competence and theatrical illusions must he brought under sharper scrutiny.

Mr. Reagan is vulnerable on at least four basic questions: his ability to get the nuclear arms race and the budget deficits under control, his partiality toward the rich and his determination to appoint friends and ideological conservatives to key excoutive and judicial positions.

He has recently been speaking more about peace and arms control but his relations with the Russians have deteriorated so far in three years that his chances of relieving the m-clear menace are questionable at best. Mr. Mondale has raised the arms and debt issues but has not brought them down to the harsh reality they deserve. The facts are clear enough: While Mr. Reagan tours America talking about how much stronger and safer it is than in 1980, the truth is that every day the Soviet Union now produces three and a half new nucle ar weapons, the United States pro-duces one and a half new nuclear weapons and the interest on the present U.S. debt alone now costs the nation $300 million more every day.

"You ain't seen nothing yet," he proclaimed in his Labor Day speech What we "ain't seen" is the consequences of these alarming statistics or of the Supreme Court and other appointments he is likely to make if he is re-elected for another four years. What we have seen is a series of one-act plays or vaudeville acts by an accomplished actor.

The other day, Hugh Sidey of Time magazine asked the president: What about a poverty-ridden young black in a ghetto with no father, no money, mo education, no hope?

Mr. Reagan replied: "I know this is oversimplification, but it's the only way to answer the question. Basically the Democratic Party has said, We'll take care of you. We'll see you have food and shelter.' But then what is he? He is as beholden to that govern-ment institution as he was beholden in slavery to the fellow who lived in the big house on the hill. Our party is saying to them: "We want equality of saying to them: We want equality of opportunity. The only barrier will be within yourself as to your own ability vein and the next day he says that "our lives are here to serve others and to make a better world for others." One day he denounces the Soviet leaders as cunning men who preside over an "evil empire" and will lie or cheat or do anything else to achieve their objectives of world domination And he is then surprised when the Russians ignore his hopes for banishing all nuclear weapons from the world, if not from outer space. There is no coherence to this jumble of good intentions and dreamy prospects. He talks personally about reducing the influence of government on personal life, but he wants organized prayer in the public schools and federal funds for parochial schools. He opposes abortion, budget deficits and the Equal Rights Amendment for women, but he presides over the largest deficit in history. All this while calling for a constitutions amendment requiring a balanced budget, and demanding that Congress enhance his power to veto any item in any bill passed by Congress.

It is no wonder that a candidate with such a riot of policies should be the main issue in the election campaign. The wonder is that Mr. Mon-dale has been so ineffective in campaigning against him, and that the president, at his age, promising more of the same, should still be so far ahead in the popularity polls. Will this change in the next two months? Not unless reading and thinking suddenly become popular. It is permitted to criticize all candidates, but not to criticize the voters. It is assumed that they are studying the issues rather than the personal-ities involved, but there is little evidence to support this assumption.

What we are seeing so far in this campaign is a triumph of personality over policy, of political television ad vertising over substance and of wishes over realities. But you can't blame Mr. Reagan entirely for all this. He does not deny the facts of the ams race or the deficits. He jokes about his age and bombing the Russians, and adds, "You ain't seen nothing yet." On this point, he is probably right, but nobody quite knows whether this is a promise or a threat.

Parallel Nuclear Tracks

"Are we willing," John Anderson asks in "Halt This Action-Reaction Nuclear Race" (Aug. 29), "to be students of history or are we simply going to relive our past mistakes?"
I would respond that Mr. Anderson himself has not studied the history of nuclear deployments very carefully.

The notion of a strict action-reaction cycle of arms buildups does not hold water. The Russians exploded their first atom bomb only four years after Hiroshima. While it may be that Stalin intensified his program after the disclosures of U.S. explosions, there can be no doubt that the Soviets were working on nuclear weapons development almost as early as America. Both sides got wind of the technology from German scientists. The move from atom to hydrogen bombs was a logical, if unwelcome, technical step for both sides. The Russian cruise missile program dates from the 1950s and was not spurred by the U.S. program of the 1970s, as Mr. Anderson asserts. Even the oftcited example of MIRV deployment is misleading. Despite Moscow's pro-fessed wish to halt a technology in which America had the lead, it had been vigorously pursuing its own MIRV program since the early 1960s.

As for strategic defense, the Russians have long considered it in the words of analyst Michael J. Denne, an essential integral element of their military force structure." nent subjugation" of Eastern Eu-rope. Soon afterward the Soviet Union ends months of suspense and cuts short East Germany's effort to reach across the general East-West divide and cement its increasing ties with West Germany. Is there a connection?

Conceivably, yes. There is a cir-cumstantial case to be made that the Reagan administration, for reasons that appeared to it right and necessary, stepped over the bounds of tradition and discretion and contributed to an exercise in Soviet whip-cracking that might have been avoided or softened.

Consider the astonishing European developments of the past year, a period supposedly dominated by the heightening of East-West ten-sions after Soviet-U.S. talks on missiles in Europe broke down. Most Warsaw Pact states reacted by trying to improve ties with NATO members, including America.

East Germany, long regarded as the most orthodox and disciplined of the Soviet client states, has been acting in a wholly novel, self-interested way. More than any other East European country it has refused to take the missile crisis as reason to extend the freeze between Moscow and Washington into a freeze between the two parts of Eu- craving to make East Germany rerope. On the contrary, it has taken that crisis as reason, or opening, to work for a thaw between the two parts of Europe, and especially between the two German states — to "limit the damage," as Communist chief Erich Honecker put it.

Quietly but unmistakably he made known that he had not been consulted and did not approve of the new missiles that the Kremlin started planting on East German soil after Washington began stationing new American missiles, with the consent of its allies, in the West. Mr. Honecker undertook an unprecedented exchange of visits with Romania, the Warsaw Pact comrade noted most for conducting a policy not dictated in Moscow.

Rather than toe the Soviet line of harder pressure on West Germany, East Germany expanded human, economic and political ties. It is quietly trying to broaden official contacts and trade with the United States, It calmly stood up to the Soviet polemics, which presumably mirrored private warnings, criticizing its approaches to Bonn.

It stood up, that is, until last Tuesday, when Mr. Honecker canceled a long-anticipated, unprece-dented visit to West Germany. There is much that we do not know about Mr. Honecker's policy. In seeking a new tie with West Germany, to what extent is he driven by a desire to build a monument obscuring his role as the man who built the Berlin Wall in 1961? Is he being carried along not simply by a spectable but also by the same nationalistic currents that have been running in West Germany? Has he not cleverly used the East German peace movement — which surely owes much to the West German peace activities regularly seen on how has Mr. Honecker taken advantage of the Kremlin's divisions and distractions to promote his German détente policy?

Such were some of the factors at play when President Reagan deed last month, to an electionyear gathering of Polish-Americans celebrating an anti-Soviet uprising in 1944, that he rejected any claim or thought that Eastern Europe belongs irretrievably to a Soviet sphere. Secretary of State George Shultz soon underlined, in a formal address, the same theme.

They are right, of course. The Red Army took East Europe as booty and buffer in World II, and since then all American governments have been publicly committed to seeing it eventually become free. Since the mid-1950s, however, presidents have worked within a context of at least implicit respect for Moscow's interests in the region. President Reagan's servent public impatience with the Soviet grip is the new factor.

It must be asked what the effect was on the Kremlin's East German deliberations when a president it regards as an anti-Communist crusader weighed in, at a most delicate moment, with a fresh rhetorical challenge to its position on its most sensitive and strategic flank.

Moscow may be more likely to let a satellite lengthen the leash if the move is not presented as something that damages or defies the Soviet Union. I wonder if Mr. Reagan did not carelessly cross that line. The Washington Post.

Other deaths: Would Mr. Wallace have described Mr. Berri as moderate and pro-Western during Amal's attacks on U.S. marines earlier this year? It is doubtful. So does this mean that if Mr. Berri becomes frustrated

As one of Lebanon's brightest hopes, Mr. Berri has suffered a disservice by being described in such

U.S. Borrowers Return As Summer Lull Ends

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS - The summer hall in the Eurobond market ended with a bang last week, with U.S. companies alone offering a face amount of $1.35 billion worth of new issues. In addition, foreign borrowers launched offers worth $760 million and the equivalent of another $530 million in paper denominated in other currencies.

The feature of the week was the return on masse of U.S. borrowers, who have largely refrained from tapping the market pending clarification of the details concerning the midsummer removal of the U.S. withholding tax on interest payments to foreign investors and the new ability of U.S. companies to sell bearer bonds abroad.

The initial thinking about these moves was that they would cause the international dollar bond market for U.S. issuers to move to New York, allowing U.S. investment banks to reassert their primacy over managing new issues. But events have clearly demonstrated that, as the U.S. regulations implementing the tax repeal now stand, the Eurobond market has lost none of its competitive tinue to tap this market so long as it is in their interest to do so if the cost of money is cheaper, as was the case last week, or if there is a desire or need to reach a wider audience of investors. And European investment banks, such as Credit Suisse First Boston, which monopolized last week's activity as lead manager, remain able to bid for new business.

This is due to the fact that a big portion of the pool of European investors want bond holdings not only tax free but also anonymous in the form of bearer instruments. While domestic bonds of U.S. companies can now be sold tax free, they are offered only in registered form.

HE mitial boom in activity last week was triggered by the relative pancity recently of new U.S. paper. This allowed International Business Machines to raise money at a cost, including commissions, of 93 basis points — virtually a full percentage point — below what it would have had to pay in New York. A basis point is one-hundredth of a percentage point. The three-year notes, carrying a coupon of 11½ percent and priced at a discount of 99% to yield 11.85 percent, were an instant success and the amount of the issue was doubled to $200 million.

By late week, a rally in the U.S. bond market, fed by an unexpected $700-million decline in M-1, the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, and Federal Reserve action adding cash to the market, triggered a new wave of activity. A number of analysts viewed the Fed's action and the early

Banks Balk at Big Cuts Involved in Britoil Plan

PARIS — The gradual merging of the syndicated-loan market with the international bond market ran into trouble last week when some major banks balked at the substan-tial cuts they were being asked to accept in their lending charges. The showdown involved the refinancing by Britoil of a $400-mil-lion syndicated loan arranged in

SYNDICATED LOANS

1982. Interest on that eight-year loan had been set at ½ point over the London interbank offered rate for the first four years, rising to % point after that, or 1/2 point over the prime rate of U.S. banks for the first four years, rising to 1/4 point over thereafter.

Britoil is repaying $100 million of that loan and Citicorp, lead manager of the original transaction, is attempting to restructure the remaining $300 million as a backup line for the issuance of short-term commercial paper.

The aim of the operation is to significantly reduce Britail's cost of borrowed funds over the six-year life of the new agreement to less than % point over Libor per year. A tender panel of 15 banks would be set up to bid for the short-term notes, which the banks could then either keep on their own books or resell to institutional investors. There are no restrictions on the bidding: Each panel member could bid whatever it wanted and Britoil would have the option to accept or reject the terms.

Britoil's fallback, if the terms bid for the commercial paper were unattractive, would be to draw on the standby credit. The banks would earn an annual facility fee of 1/4 percent, or 12½ basis points, for holding this credit in readiness. But this fee could be cut to a thin 10 basis points if $150 million or more The charge to use the credit is basis points plus the 4-percent fa-cility fee — giving lenders a return of 22½ basis points. The basic lending charge rises five basis points for each additional $100 million Assuming all $300 million were taken from the banks, the base charge would be 20 basis points over Libor plus the reduced facility fee of 10 basis points.

Reliable sources report that this was deemed too low and that four of the nine original managers -Manufacturers Hanover Trust, National Westminster, RepublicBank of Dallas and Security Pacific — have dropped out of the project.

The Industrial Bank of Japan has been invited into the deal in the hope of stirring interest among Japanese lenders, and invitations have gone out to other banks to join the management group. What critics object to is the fact that drawings on the backup credit are not more remunerative. They argue that the implication of Britoil's being unable to market commercial paper at terms it finds ac-drawing on the bank credit should reflect that presumed state The formula these banks seem to (Continued on Page 9, Col. 4)

Mexico Unveils Debt Pact

Foreign Banks To Weigh Plan

By William J. Orme Washington Past Service MEXICO CITY — Mexico has won an agreement in principle from foreign banks to reschedule payments of $48.5 billion in gov-ernment debts over the next 14 years, Finance Minister Jesús Silva

Herzog announced.
At a news conference Friday, he noted that the agreement "breaks with orthodoxy to a considerable extent" in its stretched-out amortization plan and in its technical terest rates.

The reschedning was negotiated with a 13-bank steering committee representing Mexico's higgest pri-vate creditors. It still must be ap-proved by the more than 500 for-money by Mexico.

The package covers virtually "everything that is restructurable" in the Mexican public-sector debt, including $20 billion due between 1985 and 1990, $23 billion that had already been restructured and $5 billion in 1983 loans.

Instead of the huge $10-billion payments due next year, Mexico will pay $250 million, and no pay-ment over $3 billion will be due until after 1988.

In addition, interest on $43 bilin addition, interest on $43 billion of the $48.5 billion, pegged at the U.S. prime rate, will be exchanged for the London interbank offered rate, which historically has been slightly lower.

This will save Mexico nearly $1 billion in the next two years and about $350 million annually there-after, Mexican officials calculate. The terms set a precedent and will strengthen the bargaming posi-tion of other large Laim American debtors, Mr. Silva Herzog said.

While acknowledging that Mexico anticipates some resistance, especially from smaller banks involved primarily in short-term trade financing in Mexico, Mr. Silva Herzog expressed confidence that the transaction will be concluded within a year.

A novel aspect of the proposed agreement is a provision permitting reditors to review Mexico's economic progress through government financial documents and the reports it presents annually to the itemational Monetary Fund.

While the banks would have pre-ferred to supervise Mexico's eco-nomic development, the new arrangement would still allow bankers to suspend the restructuring accord if they believed the country to be heading anew toward basis points if $150 million or more "disastrous" economic circum-of the backup credit is actually stances, Mr. Silva Herzog said.

The Trans-Atlantic Aerospace Split U.S. Companies Push for Ties as Europeans Pull Away

FARNBOROUGH, England — Leading U.S. aerospace companies, faced with a renewed drive for independence in Western Hurope, are pushing to develop and expand links with their trans-

Atlantic counterparis.

Their aim is to participate influrope's drive for multibillion-dollar projects in such crucial areas as the construction of new fighter aircraft, military helicopters and advanced engines.

But their efforts could prove difficult. The industries of Britain, France, Germany, Italy and other European countries are embarking on projects in section these areas neithy to achieve when other European countries are embarking on projects in each of these areas, paily to achieve what they see as more independence from the United States, particularly in the aerospace field.

European industry and government officials point out that the United State has an arms-trade surplus with Europe. That surplus last year exceeded $1.8 billion, according to North Atlantic Treaty Organization figures.

They also note that Europe wants to preserve jobs in its aerospace industries. About 500,000 workers are now employed, but companies have been hurt by a slowing in export markets for arms, notably in the Middle East and Latin America. Companies have also suffered from intense competition with U.S. military contractors.

At the Famborough Air Show, which ended Sunday, mock-ups of key European projects, such as a new tactical fighter for the 1990s and an advanced French-German helicopter, were the focus of intense discussion. The fighter project alone, assuming it materializes, could generate $30 billion in orders for European sentences communicated.

in orders for European aerospace companies and Europe's new push for independence, aimed at keeping us out of key aerospace markets here, has many of us deeply concerned," said Colin Green, vice president of planning for the Sikorsky aircraft division of United Technologies Corp., the U.S.

In Mr. Green's view, such a move could dissipate European resources while duplicating basic technology available across the Atlantic." He also warned that "a nationalist policy" in Europe could polarize the U.S. and European industries.

Some Europeans echo the concern. Lord Carrington, secretary-general of the North Adantic Treaty Organization, warned in a speech Wednes-day to the Society of British Aerospace Compa-nies: "The defense industries of the alliance will have to learn to work together if in the long run we are going to get the defense equipment that we need at a price that governments can afford." Despite the obstacles, leading U.S. and Europe-second-ranking acrospace company after Messer-schmitt-Bölkow-Blohm, might participate with Bell in developing new vertical-lift planes for the Pentagon to replace helicopters in the United States starting in 1991. Regan Bans Sale Of Bearer Bonds Backed by U.S.

Secretary Donald T. Regan has banned the issuance of U.S. government-backed bearer securities by private securities dealers to foreign investors, which had been sharply criticized in Congress.

Mr. Regan said he was prohibiting the issuance abroad in an effort to make tax treatment of all securinies consistent and to prevent competition for the federal government in sales of U.S. securities to for-

Mr. Regan said in his letter to ngress that as a tax-dolicy mat ter, a transaction should be "treated according to its substance and not its form. He said the second reason for his decision "is one of fairness to U.S. government issuers and the taxpayers that ultimately bear the burden of interest paid on U.S. government securities."

"If repackaged U.S. government securities may be issued in bearer form, they will compete in the mar-ketplace against the U.S. govern-ment securities issued directly by the U.S. government issuer, "If the repackaged security is sued in bearer form obtains a lower yield, however, it will not accrue to the benefit of the U.S. government or our taxpayers but will go instead to the private intermediary." Mr. Regan said the rules of com-pliance "are carefully designed to provide the maximum protection against evasion of tax by U.S. persons, while permitting U.S. borrowers to obtain efficient access to foreign capital."

All securities backed by U.S. government bonds are covered under the prohibition, Treasury De-partment officials said.

Such a security will be considered a U.S. government-backed instrument if more than 50 percent of the income or collateral supporting the security consists of income or principal of a U.S. government se-curity, Treasury said.

FALSE DAWN: Women in the Age of the San King

By Louis Auchincloss, 184 pp. $14.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10167.

THE effulgent epoch of the Sun King, Louis XIV, was surely the high noon of the French monarchy; many historians regard his reign as the meridian of French culture. For the women of France, and much of Europe, the era was rather a sunrise, and a brief one, according to Louis Auchincloss in this pleasant collection of linked essays designed for the amateur of history rather than the scholar. While he may have called it "False Dawn" partly as a salute to his revered biographee Edith Wharton (it's the name of one of her novellas), this title does announce his initial thesis: that women then had unprecedented opportunities for influence, independence and even anthority, unequaled until the 20th centu-

"Madame de Sévigne," "Mary of Modena,"
"The Duchess of Marlborough," "Queen Christina" — a glance at the contents page suggests that the subtitle may be misleading since the chapters are character sketches not only of French women but English, Swedish, German and Italian as well; furthermore, nationality is often confused by foreign marriages or careers. The French-born Princesse des Ur is, for example, married an Italian nobleman and later became adviser to the young queen of Spain. Nevertheless, with the partial exception of Queen Christina and Sophia of Hanover, all these women were deeply affected, their lives largely determined, by Louis XIV in his various roles as cousin, lover, husband, patron, ally or enemy. The active life spans of these ladies, moreover, and the major events in which they were involved, were all bounded by the dates of Louis's birth and death: 1638-1715. It would have been careless and procrustean to have called them "Women of the 17th Century." Wherever they lived, they did indeed flourish or fade in response to "the far-spreading rays of the Sun King."

"An international pest" was Winston Chur chill's brusque assessment of this grand mon-arch. Churchill had little patience with those French leaders of any century, even if brave allies, who exemplified the Gallic code of gloire, which to Anglo-Saxons often seems to be patriotism without perspective, pride without proportion. Louis XIV is the incarnation of gloire and though Auchincless concedes the grandoise artistic glories of that reign, he condemns what he describes, perhaps unfairly, as the primary component of gloire; "the thrill of trampling on one's neighbors for the pleasure of trampling." Louis's purpose was not to wade in blood, of course (he was not a barbanan). but to have others under his elegant, high scarlet heel.

Auchincloss says of Louis: "He might have raised his hat gallantly to a chambermaid, but he did not regard women as having a role to be noted in the serious business of life. The strides that women made towards emancipation in his reign were with no help from him."

Alas, the "strides that women made towards emancipation in his reign" vastly overstates the case. Every woman depicted here is titled even the two nuns are abbesses -and most are queens. High rank and wealth usually liberate those who possess them, male or female, but even the most powerful queens — Cleopatra Elizabeth I and Victoria — did little to raise the status of their female subjects. Moreover, while a few of the women are remarkable for their wisdom, wit, charm or will (almost all of these are French except for the spectacular Sarah Churchill), the majority, like Mary II, Anne and Mary of Modena, would have no place in history but for the ranks they inherited of married. The great talent of Abigail Hill (heroine of a 1983 novel "Exit Lady Masham" but this same prolific author) seems to be the this same prolific author) seems to be that she was a skilled masseuse. Fame was thrust of many. Queen Anne, a Niobe of 17 dead child dren, found her position a sacred duty but heavy burden. Finally, in almost any century one could find a dozen or so women who high birth and vitality "emancipated."

While the False Dawn thesis is thus unconvincing, this is not important to the book since all these lives are interesting and recounter with urbanity. With generosity and affection as well — although Auchineless finds Madage de Montespan ruthless, Mary II disappointing and Sarah Churchill exasperating, he concedes their verve and glamour; he shows Queen Anne and Lady Masham and Madame de Lafayette as unexciting, but he conveys their goodness. Moreover, as the feminist theme falters, another emerges that is equally important and relevant to our time: the contrast between those determined to achieve gloire, political or personal, who are usually gifted and arrogant, and those others who are less egocentric and who are concerned with promoting peace and sta-

Navratilova Wins U.S. Open As Evert Empties Her Arsenal

By John Feinstein Washington Post Service NEW YORK — Chris Evert Lloyd threw every shot she had at Martina Navratilova. She hit winners to every corner of the court. She passed Navratilova, she even won a set with a forehand volley. But in the end, it was not quite enough to beat Navratilova, who on Saturday won her second straight U.S. Open termis championship with a 6-4, 4-6, 6-4 victory in a match that proved the greatness of both players.

In winning her 55th straight match and her lifth straight Grand Slam event, Navratilova had to come from behind against Evert in a match that began near dusk and lasted I hour and 47 minutes. "Martina showed what kind of a champion she is," Evert told the crowd, which had cheered for her throughout the match. "She came up with great shots on the big points and deserved to win."

"I just reached down and pulled out everything I had in me," Nav-ratilova said. "I probably surprised Chris with how bad I wanted it. I probably surprised myself with how much I really fought." Said Evert: "I hoped she would have a letdown. I questioned her desire for this tournament. I had my chances, again she put in some big serves and played the big points better than I did."

Navratilova won $160,000 and Evert won $80,000. But neither was terribly concerned with money. Each had history in mind: Evert trying to win a seventh U.S. Open title, Navratilova trying to close within one victory of Evert's record for consecutive match victories. On Friday, Lloyd trounced 16-

DALLAS - At first, the tugs of war within the Dallas Cowboys family were almost imperceptible. The owner's health was failing; he needed to settle the estate. The team's confidence in the quarterback was eroding; the younger man yearned for the chance to take over Recent drafts had been less fruitful than expected; the team was aging.

By the 15th week of the season, it all began to blow open. In the third quarter of a close and critical game against the Redskins, Danny White called an audible, which was clearly not what the coach, Tom Landry, had wanted. The Redskins went on to win handily. The following week in San Francisco, the Cowbovs lost by a wide margin again, and in the d-card playoff game against the Los Angeles Rams in Dallas, they lost once more. Their season was over; not since 1961 had they finished with three consecutive losses. If this was America's team, America was in trouble.

Then, there was a decision by Clint Murchison, the Cowboys' first and only owner, to sell the team. He left the matter to Tex Schramm, the club president and general manager, to round up new owners. By March, he had. By May, the papers were signed.

And there was the matter of the team itself. "A divided team by the ings like a yo-yo." Cash spoke of team itself. LANGUAGE The Secret Plan

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — A deli-cious, sinister phrase has been an early centerpiece of the Democratic campaign against Ronald Reagan: The president is charged with harboring a secret plan to raise taxes after the election.

Walter Mondale has already frankly asserted that he would raise taxes to lower the deficit, while laying the secret-plan bait in two punchy sentences in his acceptance speech: "He won't tell you. I just

The president promptly stepped into the trap, by insisting he had "no plans" to raise taxes. In Spokesmanspeak, the signal-ridden language of pressrooms, the phrase no plans is a term of art meaning "not ready for announcement yet." (A calibration further, no present it Monday.")

The no-plans response enabled the Democrats to blaze away with the charge that the president had a secret plan to raise taxes. In retreat. Reagan finally had to say he could "never say never" (and the originator of that great presidential axiom remains unknown), but he would raise taxes only as "a last resort."

The secret-plan ploy had worked ngain. Cartoonist Wayne Stayskal of The Tampa Tribune showed a pollster at a doorway being told by a housewife: "I'm a registered Democrat ... but I've got a secret plan to vote Republican!

Mondale was ready with his secret secret-plan plan, because he was laid low by his use of brain-had been on the receiving end of washed. Who remembers the fireshad been on the receiving end of the charge this spring. Senator John Glenn, stamming his primary opponent's undue caution, said, "To be so cautious that your plat-form consists of secret plans to be revealed after the elections -- to be that cautious is not leadership, it's politics." The New York Times headline over the story zeroed in on the catch phrase: "Glenn Says Ri-val Has 'Secret Plans."

These happy hand-me-downs made me smile, because I was writing speeches for Richard Nixon in the spring of 1968 when the phrase was first used as a political charge. In a speech about Vietnam, the candidate for the Republican nomination pledged to "end the war and win the peace in the Pacific." Supporters of George Romney, who was the Rockefeller stalkinghorse in the New Hampshire primary, promptly elevated that vague Nixon promise to a "plan" and demanded more details. In the Nixon camp, we knew there was no plan; some specific ideas for negotiation were scheduled for delivery in a speech on March 31, 1968, but that speech was scrubbed when President Johnson announced his retirement that night. Romney kept hammering away, "Where is your secret plan?" Within a week, a false quotation had been manufactured: Nixon was widely quoted as having said. "I have a secret plan to end the war." Such a statement would have been, on its face, nonsense for any political figure to say, but many newspapers ran it as gospel. Nixon never

Years later, in the White House, the Nixon speechwriters would see the false quotation surface in some column; we took delight in writing the columnist: We're trying to find the origin of that remark. Do you happen to have the clip?" This straight-faced query led to red-faced embarrassment, which satisfied some of our mediaphobia.

Today, the secret-plan charge has become part of many artful campaigns. It is a means of attacking a generality-peddling politician for not being specific enough; if and when the opposition promiser is suckered into revealing a plan, the attacker then says, "See? We smoked him out," and blazes away at the specifics of the newly re-vealed (and usually newly created)

Credit belongs to Romney, who torm over brainwashed any more? Nobody; yet secret plan, little re-marked at the time, has found its place in the art of invidious inveighing.

'The Roar' of Broadway Past

By Martin Gottlieb

New York Times Service

New York Times Service

New York — The time was about two bells — that is, 2 A.M. in the street vernacular of the day — on an average morning in what Walter Winchell later referred to as the Oh-So-Long-

The place was the original Lindy's Restaurant, near 50th Street, the undisputed spiritual hub of that improbable stretch of Broadway that insiders called the Stem and outsiders the Great White Way. It was an unexceptional morning, as Sid Garfield, a show business press agent, recalls. Not much happened other than a lot of conversation, commonly referred to as schmoozing. But the identity of the schmoozers was what made Broadway Broadway - an erstwhile magic that the new efforts to rebuild Times Square may find difficult to capture again. Holding court at one table, Garfield remembers, was Jack Benny. At a table behind him was Babe Ruth. At a third table, J. Edgar Hoover.

Because of the hour, the tens of thousands of light bulbs that bathed night-time Broadway in its unearthly white glow had already been dimmed.

The boisterous din that once led Dates Broadway in the street of the boisterous din that once led Dates and the street of the boisterous din that once led Dates Broadway and the boisterous din that once led Dates Broadway and the books of the books of mon Runyon to pull a newspaper crony aside and implore him to "listen to the roar" had quieted.

Final curtains had come down hours before on the musicals that were transforming popular American theater, on the plays turned out regularly by Eugene O'Neill and Maxwell Anderson, and on the vaudeville reviews featuring Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and an array of what Walter Winchell labeled Main Stem

But at Lindy's the beat went on, re-plenished by big band musicians who settled over scrambled eggs and coffee after an evening's work, and by welldressed, somewhat sullen gangsters such as Arnold Rothstein, of whom The New York American wrote, "A hist for risk vibrated in every corpuscle of his blood, but he harnessed his emotions with nerves of steel wire."

Far removed in time and texture from this era — which blossomed after World War I and all but died by the end of the 1950s — is the $1.6-billion redevelopment plan proposed by the city and the state for Times Square.

Yet many of the debates about the plan have centered on the spirit of those times and whether it will be buried or resuscitated by the office towers, theater restorations and other major construction efforts proposed.

The sentiment for days long gone does not surprise many of the people who spent chunks of their careers in the old Times Square.

Morey Amsterdam spoke about it the other day, over an appetizer that he described as "fried cholesterol," at the Carregie Delicatessen on Seventh Avenue.

"The minute you tag the name Broadway on anything, it's a tremendous success—there's something magic about it, a sparkle," he said. "People don't think of it to it is today."

it as it is today." For decades there have been calls in New York not to replace Times Square but somehow to bring back what once

At a news conference last month, William J. Stern, the chairman of the State Urban Development Corporation, touted the plan by saying, "This project will help to bring back the days of George M. Cohan when Broadway was truly the Great White Way."

Critics argue, however, that the plan would turn a once great and, however tawdry, still electric street into another high-rise business district.

The plan calls for four huge office towers, a 2.4 million-square-foot (220,000-square-meter) merchandise mart, a 550-room hotel and the restoration of seven theaters on 42d Street be-tween Seventh and Eighth Avenues that once housed such productions as the Ziegfeld Follies and "Abie's Irish Rose" and are now flashy, cut-rate movie the-aters, many showing films with explicit sex or violence.

What this new plan does is ratify the last generation of changes in Manhattan," said Richard C. Wade, professor of urban history at the City University Graduate Center.

Wade, who has endorsed the plan with a few disclaimers, said: "Nostalgia's fine. but higher-scale development has already gone so far that you can't recapture the old era. Times Square will change inevitably and historically anyway — and what is good about this is that at least somebody's thought about planning the Brendan Gill, theater critic of The New Yorker magazine and a leader of the New York Landmarks Conservancy, has emerged as one of the most outspoken critics of the plan.

"It is totally anti-urban and elitist in its nature," he said. "They want to get rid of the look and smell of 42d Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues because it represents what they regard as the ene-

Yet, he says, the "enemy" has always been an integral part of Times Square. "For 50 years, to my certain knowledge, people have been pleading, 'Clean up Times Square,' "he said. "There was always sex, there was always filth, there was always a lowering of moral standards. And there always has been joy."

At its height, this joy came out of a time that Westbrook Pegler once defined as an era of "wonderful nonsense."
Through the theater district and a scattering of outposts, this spirit continues to touch Broadway, however faintly, and through a legacy of bright lights, style, artistic significance and myth it continues to leave impressions on American

From his penthouse at the old Forrest

Across 8th Avenue was the old Garden. Across Broadway, Lindy's. Across 49th Street were the Brill Building — Tin Pan Alley — and the ticket office of Mike Jacobs, a prominent fight promoter. After stops at Lindy's and such speakasies as the Furnace Club on 52d Street, he would do some schmoozing at the beach, stop off in the lobby of the Forrest to chat with its varied denizens, and retire to his one-bedroom penthouse where, beginning in 1929, he melded these conversations into what one of his biographers, Edwin P.
